L1 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.

L2 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.

L3 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.

L4 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.

L5 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.

L6 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.