L1 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L2 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L3 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.
L4 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.
L5 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L6 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L7 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.
L8 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.
L9 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L10 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L11 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.
L12 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.
L13 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L14 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L15 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.
L16 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.
L17 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L18 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L19 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.
L20 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.
L21 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.

tmr1c1	tmr1c2
tmr2c1	tmr2c2
tmr3c1	tmr3c2
tmr4c1	tmr4c2
tmr5c1	tmr5c2

tmr6c1	tmr6c2
tmr7c1	tmr7c2
tmr8c1	tmr8c2
tmr9c1	tmr9c2
tmr10c1	tmr10c2

L22 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.

L23 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.

L24 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.

L25 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.

L26 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.