L1 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L2 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L3 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.

tdr1c1	tdr1c2
tdr2c1	tdr2c2

L4 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.
L5 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L6 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L7 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.
L8 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.
L9 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.

tcr1c1	tcr1c2
tcr2c1	tcr2c2

L10 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L11 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.
L12 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.
L13 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L14 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L15 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.
L16 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.