L1 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L2 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L3 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.
L4 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.
L5 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L6 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L7 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.
L8 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.
L9 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L10 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L11 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.
L12 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.

tfr1c1	tfr1c2
tfr2c1	tfr2c2

L13 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L14 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L15 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.
L16 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.
L17 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L18 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L19 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.
L20 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.
L21 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L22 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L23 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.

tgr1c1	tgr1c2
tgr2c1	tgr2c2

L24 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.
L25 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L26 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.
L27 A narrow bridge crosses the stream behind the chapel, and travellers pause there to watch the water turn the slow wooden wheel.
L28 By noon the square fills with voices, and the clock above the arcade strikes the hour a little later than the church bell does.
L29 The harbour road climbs past the old salt warehouses before it bends toward the quiet market square where the stalls open early.
L30 Children carry baskets of bread while the bakers stack trays of rolls beside the fountain and count the morning takings aloud.